

International Association for Peace and Economic Development (IAED)

IAED is an international organization included in the Universal Peace Federation (UPF) that centers its activities in the field of business and economic development as a means to create peace and mutual prosperity in the world.

IAED's goal is to build a platform of all stakeholders linked to business and economic development, from where we look for practical means to cooperate and promote mutual prosperity and peace through the Economy and Economic Development.

To achieve it, IAED considers as its main values the following: market economy, quality, innovation, creativity, efficiency, sustainability, sufficient production, labor participation, legal security, social and individual responsibility, fair distribution, reasonable consumption, protection and respect to the environment.

To do that IAED wants to count on:
Businesses and business leaders; investors; economic thought leaders; government economic officials; business school academicians; associations of entrepreneurs from large, middle and small enterprises; workers and employee associations (trade unions); and other concerned citizens or entities.

Consequently, IAED will promote and organize international and national activities in the economic field, such as:

1. Establishing trustful links between all people concerned in businesses and economic development.
2. Organizing meetings and team groups to:
 - a. Allow for new ideas to flourish
 - b. design new projects and promote its implementation,
 - c. analyze and learn from the best practices in businesses,
 - d. inspire an excellent private and public leadership of the economy and business activities,
 - e. bring out the good practices of economic policies, principles and ethical questions,
 - f. prepare educational materials and
 - g. inspire a private and public leadership of the economy and business activities
 - h. Any other activities that promote IAED values.
